Fulcrum Health names Renea Stuckey Chief Operations Officer

Stuckey brings more than 35 years’ experience working with a wide variety of stakeholders and health system partners to the growing physical medicine organization

Plymouth, MN (July 28, 2020) — Fulcrum Health, Inc., announced today that it promoted Renea Stuckey to the position of chief operations officer in June. Stuckey transitions into the role after consulting with Fulcrum and serving as chief of staff over the past three years.

Stuckey brings more than 35 years of healthcare industry experience to her new role at Fulcrum. Prior to joining the organization in 2017, she served as principal of her own business management consulting practice, Hood & Associates. Stuckey also held leadership roles at UnitedHealth Group, Optum Health, and Medica and has experience working with payers, providers, benefit managers, and healthcare system vendors at all levels.

“Healthcare delivery has experienced tremendous change, and Renea has the experience and cross-sector perspective that will allow Fulcrum to continue to innovate on behalf of our providers and their patients, while responding to changes driven by the COVID-19 pandemic,” said Patricia Dennis, CEO of Fulcrum Health. “Renea has an innate talent for developing creative solutions that enable high-quality, cost-effective care and convenient access for patients, while achieving optimal cost and quality outcomes for providers and payers.”

Stuckey graduated magna cum laude with a Bachelor of Science degree in business administration and a minor in computer science from National College of Business. She has achieved additional certifications in Six Sigma, Scrum Master, and PMP. Over the years, Stuckey has dedicated her time to advancing the healthcare industry by serving on executive committees for the Women’s Health Leadership Trust, and actively participating in Women in Business Leadership, Women in Technology, the National Association of Female Executives, Chamber of Commerce Diplomats, and the American Society for Training and Development.

“Physical medicine plays a significant role in healthcare, from facilitating nonsurgical pain management and injury recovery to managing chronic conditions,” said Stuckey. “I’m thrilled to put my experience to work and help Fulcrum achieve our vision of leveraging physical medicine to transform healthcare.”
